Dr Hin Hin Ko, GI/Heptatologist

Dr. Hin Hin Ko is a Clinical Professor at the University of British Columbia. She is a hepatologist and gastroenterologist at St. Paul's Hospital in Vancouver.. She is a Fellow of AASLD and AGA.

She received her medical doctor degree from the University of Toronto. She then completed her Internal Medicine residency Internal Medicine and Gastroenterology fellowship at UBC. With her strong interest in liver diseases, she completed an additional year of fellowship in Hepatology and Nutrition at the University of Toronto.

Her special interests are viral hepatitis, autoimmune liver disease, and metabolic dysfunction associated steatotic liver disease.

In addition to her busy clinical practice, Dr. Ko is deeply committed to research. She serves as a committee member of the Canadian HBV Network and a steering committee member of the Canadian Network for Autoimmune Liver Disease. As principal investigator for several clinical trials and investigator-initiated studies, she has authored numerous peer-reviewed publications and several national guidelines. Lastly, she is a strong patient advocate for Hepatitis B and autoimmune liver disease education. Currently, she is co-chair of the Canadian Hepatitis B Peer Support Group.

Session: How are Liver Diseases Treated and the Importance of Early Detection!

1. Understand the diagnostic process for different conditions.
2. Learn about possible treatment options.
3. Understand the importance of early detection and prevention of complications.